The Festival of the Trays takes place every four years; the next one will take place in July 2023. Do not miss this unique event!

The blessing of the trays, the street decorations, the quilts in the windows and the throwing of flowers over the procession of the trays carried by hundreds of young girls on their heads, is an unforgettable sight.

The Procession of the Tabuleiros, heralded by pipers and fireworks, is led by the Banner of the Holy Ghost and the three Crowns of the Emperors and Kings. They are followed by the Banners and Crowns from all the parishes, and the girls carrying the trays. In the rear are the cartloads of bread, meat and wine, pulled by the symbolic sacrificial oxen, with golden horns and sashes.

The girls who carry the trays have to wear long white dresses with a coloured sash across the chest. They are helped by boys, who also wear a formal costume, white shirts with rolled-up sleeves, dark trousers, a black tasselled cap and a tie matching the girl's sash. The tabuleiro (tray headdress), which must be of the same height as the girl, is made up of 30 loaves of bread, specially shaped and each weighing 400 grams, threaded at equal spaces on 5 or 6 canes. The canes are tied to a wicker basket, and at the top there is a Crown with the Cross of Christ or the Dove of the Holy Ghost. The decoration is completed by paper flowers, greenery and wheat sheaves.

Having completed 20 years of creation together, André Braga and Cláudia Figueiredo wanted to celebrate the date and reflect on a pathway, but in a way that came to launch clues for the future. With a path made up of cycles and ratures, they also now want this moment to mark a new start. Taking the inspiration of the body-archive concept developed by André Lepecki, 20.20 takes as a starting point the work on the archive of movements, texts and research notes of this duo of creators. Wanting total distance from a nostalgic or revivalist approach, the principle is to "identify in the work past creative fields not depleted of new possibilities" by making a "radical invention of new lives and unfolding for the original material".

Ai Weiwei, who was elected the most popular artist in the world in 2020 by The Art Newspaper, is known worldwide as a political activist and symbol of resistance to oppression, as well as a defender of civil rights and freedom of expression.

In this exhibition, which occupies an area of 4,000 m², a set of 85 of his works is exhibited, including installations and sculptures in large, medium, and small scale, as well as videos/films and photographs, being presented for the first time in the same space and at the same time the most iconic works of Ai Weiwei, as well as four new pieces produced in Portugal.

The exhibition, that has been managed by the Brazilian Marcello Dantas, presents the two creative dimensions of the artist - fantasy and reality - that has been developing a work of cultural archaeology in search for the identity that China lost, namely regarding traditions and iconography, a fantastic and mystical dimension, but also addresses issues that afflict all peoples, with the worsening of human conditions on the planet for political, environmental, or social reasons.

"See You Later Space Island" is a work that makes use of speculative fiction to re-imagine possible futures and cosmologies from the island of Santa Maria, where it is planned to build the first European space base for launching rockets and microsatellites. Set in a fictional future where the first satellites are already being launched from the island, the film follows the reunion of two friends when one of them, an astrophysicist, returns to Santa Maria to work at an astronomical observatory. Upon arriving, he faces the rapid changes witnessed by the human and non-human inhabitants of the island. Between the geological ancestry and the immensity of the celestial space, the two friends combine visions and distinct experiences regarding the projects of space exploration from Santa Maria. From the island to the universe, the project proposes a reflection on space and expansion, and the forms and practices with which territories, ideas and bodies are observed and occupied.

Razor's Edge draws inspiration from the book of Somerset Maugham and in the search that Larry Darrel makes for the meaning of life, of his identity and space in the world. A path made between materialism and spirituality, in a dichotomy as contemporary as before. In the end what matters was that each character made it the way he wanted to do it. Today, in a world that is so open and diverse, where everything changes site and keeps up, at the same time, making that demand, it is a path by multiplicity and dissimilarity without knowing whether it finds itself to be that it really is. - And so much has to come across, being the setback an intimate pair of the happiness, the danger and the unknown of a razor's thread at times discontinuous, common in many of us. At Razor's Edge, the artist opposes the immovable that changes with an almost immovable alteration. In its opposite, almost mirror vivo, it gives itself a search, a fight, a depreneal. It must be known to let go during the search. It's important. Not being a scissors fight as in Rebecca Horn, in "Cutting One's Hair with Two Scissors at Once," there is in the same way a battle, between melancholy / anxiety and the vitality / pulsar of life. As in the myth of Sanson, the loss of hair does not mean the loss of the forces, but rather the discovery of the true strength. But yes they are riskless, with the passing of time, the immutable and the violence of thought. The risks have to run out.

The temporary exhibition "Capsules of Time, the Underwater Cultural Heritage of the Azores" is an exhibition project, which will be open until 8 August. It appears within the scope of the Margullar 2 Project, with Interreg-MAC co-financing, and aims to make known the stories of shipwrecks documented in the Azorean seas and the geo-strategic importance of the archipelago in the European expansion of the 15th century. Dispersed by the waters of the Azores seas rest about a thousand shipwrecks which, by constituting individualized narratives of maritime disasters, represent time capsules of times that, as if in a magical machine, allow access to past eras that substantiate the relevant insular underwater heritage. The exhibition, comprising a dozen panels (in roll-up format), will feature several pieces that have never been shown before, related to the shipwrecks discovered in recent years at Baía da Horta.

Fernando Penim Redondo was born in Lisbon in 1945. In 1967 he was incorporated into the Navy and sent as a Marine Lieutenant to Guinea until 1970. With the usual passion for photography, the inevitable collection of old cameras emerged, feeling that traditional photography was disappearing and that the opportunities to practice it would not last long. In 2012 he started with his project "Flashback", which consists in portraying his "habitat" with 500 film roll cameras manufactured throughout the 20th century. He has thus devoted the last ten years to showing his country to more than five hundred chambers, whose objectives knew only other corners of the planet. To achieve this, it used about 1,000 rolls of film of 20 different types, some of which ceased to be produced decades ago. Many of the machines in your collection were born before you and in some cases have been photographing for over 100 years. They came from all over the world and we cannot even imagine the things they will have seen during their lives (except for the forgotten negatives within some of them).

Aquaria - Or the Illusion of an Enclosed Sea is an exhibition that looks at how the ocean entered our cities, our homes or our cultural institutions, and that questions the process of interiorization of the kingdom of the oceans. Invented in Victorian times, the aquarium as an object materializes the nature/culture division, and continues to represent the ocean in a diorama, a self-contained world and a techno-natural assemblage, housing a living collection that mirrors our own personal marine world, but fictional. After months of confinement in our homes, we are also, to some extent, metaphorically floating within our own isolated technological aquariums: our existence in the aquarium now leads to comparisons with the artificial aquatic dimension, questioning again our geocentric relationship with the oceanic sphere. Thus, the aquarium - whether the domestic object or the public place - is conceived here as the conceptual object that allows us to expose the hierarchical mechanisms that have supported our culture of life outside nature: how should we interfere in this creation process of a world that arises when our vision is limited to what we see?

Artur Manuel Rodrigues of Cruzeiro Seixas was born in 1920 and left us less than a month away from being 100 years old. Celebrating the centenary of his birth, BNP presents "Cruising Speed", an exhibition that brings together close to hundred and a half of unpublished works, most of them produced between the 40's and 70's, and are part of the collection that the artist donated to the National Library. Considered the last of the Portuguese surrealists, his fine-stroke drawings have always been faithful to this aesthetic language, which emerged in the early 1920s in order to transform society and free the spirit. The man who painted, and who hated the designation "painter", was still an illustrator and poet, with a vast and varied work, but always unmistakable, and left an indelible mark on the cultural panorama of his generation. In 1993, Cruzeiro Seixas donated part of his collection to BNP, where you can find letters received, press archive, catalogues and leaflets published by the Surrealist Group and more than 400 drawings and collages representative of the various plastic expressions of his work. Cruzeiro Speed, exhibition curated by Bernardo Pinto de Almeida, is based on this collection.

The third edition of the project "The Power of the Word III" proposes an exhibition intervention at the Islamic Oriente Gallery that seeks the voice of women in this space of the Museum. Where do women meet in the Islamic East Gallery? And how do they appear in this place? These seemingly simple questions, which have never been addressed before, lead to a new feminist reading of the Collection. By abandoning the traditional framing of imperial categories, which has always emphasized the dynasties of male heritage (Safavids, Mughals, Ottomans), this project seeks to recover the voices of the women who created these objects, or who played a role in their existence. A group of women who express themselves in different languages ??(Arabic, Persian, Turkish and Portuguese) have come together to collaboratively research and tell stories, and thus create new narratives that empower women and which are explored here: from history from Eve and Original Sin to Herstory [Her Story], from the Craftswoman or Woman Artist to the Body.

This exhibition is made up of utilitarian ceramic pieces belonging to the most important pottery centers in northern Portugal. This type of crockery was used in pottery for the most common household uses and responded to family needs. Here, therefore, you can find pieces of black china, matte red china and glazed china from Parada de Gatim, Barcelos, Guimarães, Bisalhães, Vilar de Nantes, Selhariz, Pinela, Felgar and Gondar. Once used in all Portuguese houses, utilitarian tableware began to fall into disuse in the seventies of the last century, to the detriment of plastic and metal utensils.

As an emotional state resulting from the consciousness of physical or psychological threat, whether real, hypothetical or imaginary, fear has been a topic addressed by Moral Grace at various times of its artistic production. The most recent work continues to explore this issue, taking as its starting point several international events, such as the tragic death of Georges Floyd, an episode that has rekindled the history of police violence against black Americans, the increasing drama of refugees and migrants trying to reach the borders of Europe or the US in the expectation of a better life, or the uncertainties of the causes and consequences of a global pandemic. The exhibition "The Marvellous World of Barcelos Rooster" is a categorical statement of artistic excellence of the Barcelos craftsmen that embody this curious figure associated to the Legend of the Rooster, a legendary medieval episode associated to the Saint James Way. Over time the Rooster phenomenon has attracted the curiosity of many artists, considered the greatest piece of popular art and currently also a relevant symbol of contemporary Portuguese art. In Barcelos, the Rooster's figure, which started out as a simple clay figure used for children's games (usually with a whistle placed in its base) has evolved and become a highly valued decorative piece in national identity, transcending borders, which, yesterday as today, it is an undeniable curiosity for those visiting Portugal and a feature of this country in the world.

As a theatre of memories, which is unveiled to the visitor under the appearance of lost fragments, the work of Magdalena Kleszynska (Szczecinek, Poland, 1985) materialises from multiple forms and has deep relationships with history and time. Compositions and objects come out of the oxidised aluminium sheets that she cuts, folds, drills or intertwines and these seem to have been salvaged from oblivion by a meticulous archaeological process. Between visible and invisible, past and present, the real and symbolic, her works evoke, as mediators, a historical past, real, while proposing a new connection or even an interchange with contemporary history. Conceived and produced specifically for this exhibition, by an artistic residency, personal and even intimate. The protagonists of the drawings and paintings that are now presented, most unpublished, are inspired by images broadcast on television and in the press, intersecting with research around the biblical characters that populate the iconic fresco paintings that Michelangelo painted on the walls of the Sistine Chapel in the Vatican, particularly some scenes inspired by the book of Genesis. Dense and disturbing, these works are the result of a reflection on the human condition and the fear that invades us before the cruelty, the unknown, the injustice, the incomprehensible.

Ai Weiwei (Beijing, 1957) is an artist, thinker and activist whose artistic practice addresses pressing issues of our time. He is one of the most outstanding cultural figures of his generation and a symbol of freedom of expression, both in China and internationally. In Serralves, Ai Weiwei presents a body of work that reflects his concern with environmental issues and, more specifically, with the deforestation of the Brazilian Atlantic Forest. Ai's sculptures represent what remains of these once green giants and are an expression of the current consequences of the greedy devastation of the natural environment. Preserving these rapidly disappearing resources is a key issue for the future of human beings. In Serralves Park will be presented for the very first time Pequi Tree [Pequi vinagreiro], a 32-metre-high cast iron tree. Molded in Brazil, produced in China and now installed in Serralves Park, this work witnesses the disappearance of the harmonious coexistence between nature and human beings, passing from wood to metal and from mortal to eternal, as evidence and as a monument. Designed for the Serralves Park and the Museum's central room, "Ai Weiwei: Interweave" was curated by Philippe Vergne and Paula Fernandes, with the support of the artist's studio, Lisson and neugerriemschneider gallery, Berlin.

This exhibition, presented on the mezzanine of the Serralves Library, brings together a selection of works by Jorge Molder (Lisbon, 1947) based on a broader set of works from the Serralves collection. The work of Molder is known mainly for his black and white photographs, in which the artist self-writes (only the face, whole body or hands) wearing usually dark suit and white shirt, an idea that is contradicted by the two most recent series. References from literature, cinema, music or the history of art, as well as everyday life and its uncertain and unpredictable nature, are fundamental in his work, in that they can constitute the point from which one can derive and build something. The show is complemented with a set of bibliographic references important to the artist available for consultation and with the presentation of some of his books and exhibition catalogues.

Admission is free. Apophenia is the scientific term for a phenomenon we've all experienced at some point: the ability to recognize pictures, patterns, or connections in random data. It happens whenever we recognize the shape of an animal in a cloud, the profile of a face in the cut of a mountain, or the shape of a continent on the surface of a piece of toast. We know that none of these figures are the result of a prior intention. They result from our brain's ability to group random data into groups that make sense, from its irrepressible impulse to turn an abstraction into something recognizable and concrete, from its vocation to facilitate the emergence of entities that are born by force of the solidary interaction of its parts .

With light design by Nuno Maya in conjunction with the team at Serralves Park, this great outdoor exhibition presents an enormous dynamic of light and color, creating a magical atmosphere that extends to the entire Serralves Park, giving to discover breathtaking new perspectives around this remarkable natural and architectural heritage. Using various light sources, such as LED, halogen, hmi, laser or video, ambitious visual and sensory experiences are created that transport the visitor in different perceptions between the real and the imaginary, building up static or moving dialogues, through 24 facilities along a 3km route that crosses the entire Park. The introduction of color, sound and innovative visual effects allow the public to experience the Park in a very different way from its usual state. The luminous installations transform the space into immersive environments that transport us to the different seasons, which allow the connection with various natural elements of the Park. The surprising illumination route is conceived in a unique sense format, passing through several points of interest of the Park and offering the public a very varied and complete sensory journey.

The exhibition integrates a set of oils, drawings and ceramic pieces from the collection of the City Hall of Vila do Conde, from the authorship of Julio and donated by their son, Eng. José Alberto Reis Pereira, unknown to the majority of the large public and also a set of pieces of figuration in Estremoz clay, -since December 2017 classified by UNESCO as Cultural Heritage Site of Humanity-belonging to the vast collection of 375 dolls, brought together by Julio over more than 30 years, and which, since the 70, belong to the Municipal Museum of that city. This expositive proposal will certainly contribute to make it aware of a facet to many unknown of Julio: its enormous interest in popular art and collector's activity. Thus, in this exhibition, it will be possible for the visitor to get to know ceramic works that the one himself performed and which he also collected, which will allow to explore the relationships between his plastic work and the rich folk tradition of ceramics in Portugal.

In this project "Women", the artist has deepened and investigated the women of the rural world, especially women from the lanes and community villages, with which she established a strong bond, which led her to study her ways of life, customs and traditions, and later photographing them. Says Mercedes Saavedra: " The women of the raia are very, very hardworking women, who were fathers and mothers, when the men marched, they took care of the cattle and the farm, the houses and the children, participated in the typical border crossing. The women of Pitões and de Tourém speak of the galegals and the galegals, as if they were the same people: "they are like us", which is correct. The older women, the ones who were about 100, told that their mothers helped the escapees, after the "war of the Spanish" and even some of these women when they were young, watched over when their mothers carried the galegals by the mound. That help was by humanity, they didn't know about politics. "

In the role of O Lendário Homem do Trigo, Hugo Correia appears as a "one man show" and multi-instrumentalist in a live concert format / musical concept that always involves sound improvisation without aesthetic limits and the recreation of its soundtracks, with the support of a Programmed Virtual Symphony Orchestra and Looping in real time, using a palette with various influences, from Academic Music to Folklore through Urban Popular Music and Jazz, making a fusion with ambient and electronic music, with various traditional and electric instruments which are then used in conjunction with synthesizers and samplers to create sonic textures that gradually overlap until they form a single, cohesive sound. All this in favor of a very unique atmosphere that, in general, has as much of the countryside as of space.

Adolfo Luxúria Canibal and Marta Abreu have known each other for a long time. But they had never thought of working together. Confined, with all the time in the world to their advantage and with nothing to do, they decided to have fun and amuse their friends with the few means they had at home: books, an iPad and an old electric piano. That's how they started, filming with a mobile phone, Adolfo Luxúria Canibal reading poems of his or of poets of his election; and Marta Abreu creating sound environments for these readings. And that's how they were then invited to participate in various online events. After the confinement they were invited to live performances, having premiered in September at the Café-Concerto Avenida, in Aveiro. In July, they entered the studio to record an album "Goela Hiante" which was edited by Cobra Discos in December 2020. That's the record they're performing live now.

The Phantom of Liberty. "Drafty Moon" is a combat, shadow dissipation, enlightenment and detoxification disc. Far from the dormant bucolism of "Tremble Like a Flower", Bloom's discographic debut, this second breath brings a more assertive attitude, sometimes close to punk (but only spiritually), with whistles of energy sometimes overflowing, sometimes tense and restrained as an outburst. Although eclectic in the variety of styles it manages to conjure, the album is traversed by a constant tension between shadow and light, firmly anchored in the lyrics and voice of JP Simões and finely woven into the narrative architecture of the arrangements, Exemplary marriage between acoustic and electronic elements, and in the lead Miguel Nicolau exuberant. With its restlessness and its dramas of deception and disagreement, in the unhealthy galloping of the great human machine that corrodes freedom and nature with a commercial smile, "Drafty Moon" manages to be a full record of a subtle and salutary good humor: as if, on the verge of sinking into treacherous quicksand, our American hero could still say with an unbearable smile: "One day we will laugh at all this".

The Legendary Tigerman is the alter-ego of Paulo Furtado. Inspired by the old one-man-band format born on the banks of the Mississippi Delta, it is a concept adapted and lived in the 21st century, with a very particular aesthetic, the traditional analogue format (bass drum, shock plate, guitar) join, shamelessly, electronic solutions and the renowned saxophonist Cabrita. But, this is not only a musical project, here, the image, through (above all) cinema and photography are as important as music. The legendary Tigerman lives mainly on stage and regularly tours in various countries, such as Portugal, Spain, France, Switzerland, Germany, Belgium, England, USA, Japan, Brazil, Mexico and China. The year 2020 began with a national tour in this minimalist format, back to the origins, which lasted for 2021, while preparing a new long duration.

Self-taught guitar and singing, he had to talk about his very brief passage through the casting phase of The Voice Portugal program where, not having turned any of the mentors' chairs, he had the opportunity to show an original theme. It was this theme "Antes Dela Dizer Que Sim" that he released as his debut single, of his generation and revealed a distinctive sound. His successor, the self-titled "Bon Iver, Bon Iver" brought something more frenetic. In 2016 with the third album "22, A Million", Vernon returned to see something different and this represented a huge milestone, with a clear stylistic change, where acoustic guitars are replaced by keyboards and synthesizers, abandoning all folk essence. The band's fourth album "i,i" and these 13 new songs complete a cycle: since the winter of "For Emma, Forever Ago" reached the frantic spring of "Bon Iver, Bon Iver" and the uncontrolled summer of "22, A Million". After the magnificent concert at the Super Bock Festival in Stock, Michael Kiwanuka has already scheduled his return to Portugal for next year. The British musician performs on the 24th of September 2022, at Campo Pequeno, in Lisbon and on the 23rd of September 2022 at the Super Bock Arena, Pavilhão Rosa Mota, in Porto. In his luggage he brings the new album, "Kiwanuka", considered by the public and critics as one of the best albums of the year 2019, having received the highest quotation from publications such as The Guardian, NME, Q or the Daily Telegraph. The Guardian highlights the musician's "warm and sincere" vocals, in a register that is at the same time "timeless and contemporary"; the Daily Telegraph points to the "hypnotizing and charged" character of a spirit that finds relief in the music it makes.

This year Paulinho Moska returns to Portugal to present his show only with voice and guitar. The ease of traveling around the world with the guitar under his arm and singing what he composed seduced him by the more direct relationship between the artist and the audience. A Voice and a Guitar. A concert that doesn't need anything else. Only from the author with his accomplice (the guitar) singing songs that have been with us for years. The songs are more faithful to the original compositions and gain the expressive power of the author by playing and singing "in the same way they were composed".

“Urbane, all-encompassing and an absolute must”, that's how the Marés Vivas Festival (Living Tides Festival) is being described, which is taking place by the Rio Douro estuary in Vila Nova de Gaia. Have you already bought your ticket?

If the description of urbane is down to its closeness to the cities of Gaia and Porto, which makes it easy to get to by public transport, then the term all-encompassing refers to the diversity of famous artists to be heard at this festival which makes it a must for a large public coming not just from all over Portugal, but also Spain and the rest of Europe.

Apart from the music, which is being performed at a beautiful natural spot very close to the beaches, the Marés Vivas Festival is also concerned with nature and the environment, actually having the 100R Certificate which it was awarded in 2010.

Vila Baleira devotes a week to the navigator Christopher Columbus, who passed through this island and spent several years of his life living here. Columbus came into contact with Madeira in 1478, when the inhabitants of Funchal were devoting their energies to the sugar trade. Columbus lived in this archipelago after marrying the daughter of the captain of Porto Santo. His son Diogo was born here.

This festival is designed to remind people of Columbus' time in the Madeira Archipelago, during the course of his voyages to the American continent, as well as the whole epic story of the period of the Discoveries.

Music, exhibitions, street entertainment and a historical parade recreate the medieval atmosphere of Columbus' disembarkation with his companions on the town's quay. The festivities serve to make this week a truly "historic" one.

The Lisbon Marathon will take place in October which is always competed for against a backdrop of panoramic views by the river or seaside.

The 42 kms distance Marathon sets off from Cascais and follows the Coastal Road (Estrada Marginal), firstly by the sea and then along the river until the finish line at Lisbon's Parque das Nações.

The event also includes two shorter distance races which are within the reach of all those taking part. The Half Marathon sets off from the Vasco da Gama Bridge and charts a 21kms course that also finishes up at the Parque das Nações. It provides the opportunity to cross one of the longest bridges in Europe on foot on the one day when cars have to give precedence to people.

At the same time there is the Mini Marathon which is about 8kms and corresponds to the last stretch of the two races. Very popular with the locals in general, the Mini Marathon is taken by each one in their own stride, whether running or walking, since the main objective is taking part and meeting people.
